The Country Report: A Position Paper for MUN

A Graphic Novel

A strong report has four parts. We use the letters P R e P to remember them.

1.
Position

2.
Relation

3.
extra

4.
Proposal

A strong report has four parts. We use the letters P R e P to remember them.

There is one main rule for the whole paper. Every sentence must have specific facts from our research, or it must propose a specific action. If it doesn't contain research or an action, then we must delete it.

A woman with short dark hair and blue eyes is looking at a tablet. She is in a futuristic office with a city skyline visible through the window. A glowing blue light emanates from a circular base on the desk.

Part One is the Position.
What is it?

It is the first paragraph.
It defines the topic from our country's national view. Why is it important? It sets the frame for the rest of the paper. We do not repeat generic history.
The chair already knows
the history.

How to write it: Narrow the focus to your country.

Topic: Water Desalination
Country: Saudi Arabia

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia views water desalination as a survival issue
for our nation, not just a policy choice.
Without clean water from the sea,
our nation cannot survive.

Part Two is Relation.

What is it?
It connects the topic to our country using specific evidence.

Why is it important?
It proves we did real research. The chair pays the most attention to this paragraph.

How to write it:
Choose one specific example and describe it in three to five sentences.

Part Three is Extra. What is it? It is an optional paragraph for a specific case study or data set. Why is it important? It shows deep knowledge. But, if you do not have a strong example, skip it. A weak Extra paragraph is harmful to the report.

Case Study: The Jubail Desalination Complex.

The delegation highlights the Jubail complex. It faces specific energy efficiency challenges. We share our technology with Egypt and Pakistan.

Leo's Note: This proves we understand the actual technology before we propose solutions.

Jubail Complex

SMART

- Specific: Name the exact target area and region.
- Measurable: Include an indicator of progress.
- Actionable: Name a concrete step the UN should take.
- Realistic: Explain exactly how to pay for it. (Funding defeats most proposals!)
- Timely: Name a deadline for action.

Part Four is the Proposal.

What is it? It tells the committee the exact actions our country wants to happen.

Why is it important? The chair wants leaders who offer real solutions. We use the SMART method.

We need two or three SMART actions. Not ten vague ideas. Let us write a proposal for an international training center.

Specific / Actionable

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia proposes an international desalination training center [Specific / Actionable].

The Kingdom is prepared to host the first cohort by 2027 [Timely].

Timely

Realistic

The center will be supported by the national water fund [Realistic], and progress will be tracked by the number of engineers certified each year.

An illustration of three business professionals—two men and one woman—walking through a modern office hallway. They are all dressed in dark blue business suits. The man on the left is holding a black folder, the woman in the middle is holding a tablet, and the man on the right is also holding a black folder. They are walking towards the right side of the frame. The hallway has large windows on the right and a glass wall on the left. The floor is highly reflective, showing their reflections. A speech bubble originates from the man on the left, and a large, glowing blue rectangular box on the right contains a checklist of questions.

The paper is finished. It is ready for the chair to read.

Before we send the paper to the chair, we must ask:

- ☐ Did we use a specific view for our country?
- ☐ Did we use specific facts (dates, treaties, numbers)?
- ☐ Are there two or three SMART proposals?
- ☐ Is it entirely in the third person (No I, me, we, us, or our)?
- ☐ Is every sentence either research or an action?
